• FRP/GRP Trays: Produced through pultrusion or molding processes, combining fiberglass with resin to create a strong, lightweight, and durable tray . These trays are naturally non-conductive, fire-retardant, and UV-stable, making them suitable for outdoor and industrial installations.

• Perforation and Customization: Perforated trays are punched or laser-cut to create ventilation holes, while ladder and solid-bottom trays are reinforced with crossbars or side rails to support heavy cable loads .

• Commercial Buildings: Structured cabling for data and electrical systems .

• Oil & Gas and Infrastructure Projects: Offshore and coastal installations benefit from corrosion-resistant FRP trays .
